End of process: Press the "Enter" key, and enjoy the game! Source by MadBuster: is required to dispose of all the remaining work for a new building. This means the roof will need to be downsized and the rebar requirement dropped by half, the same amount of rebar that will be needed for a building that would be new to the zone. On the other hand, the ceiling height of 70' is not recommended if you plan to bring a project online as quickly as possible and out perform your competition. This will mean a greater amount of rebar and a longer lead time. Since rebar requires so much time and resources to become available to USGBC, the increased rebar will need to be transported across the country, held by the USGBC in a reserve location for an extended amount of time, and then distributed at the time it is needed. This longer lead time for an average project will also mean that the number of drawings will be higher than projects with smaller amounts of rebar, which will also add additional time for the project. Although 70' is an option for the existing building, it is not recommended, there is a shorter, safer option. With the exception of some small projects that would not require too much of the effort for this process, we do not recommend down-sizing your floor to less than 68'-7" as this will allow for a better chance for compliance with newer codes. If you are considering down-sizing your floor, make sure to ask your USGBC representative about what is allowed. The following are recommended options that are still below code but will meet standards of the ICC Code: EXCEPTIONAL SHOE Option 2a Option 2b Option 3
