* Skins & content are available for the players. * The cities are fully populated with everything from NPC to the townspeople. * Never Ending Action * Almost infinite Missions and Quests * Stories of Up to 100 Chapter * Battle Arenas in the form of mini-dungeons. We are looking forward to your feedback and ideas on the game! The City of Sheffield wants to dig into our pocket books to save the city's £1.5 million-a-year tourism promotion body. Council leader David Spiller announced the move at a meeting of the council's environment committee. He added that the body runs specialist marketing campaigns and has a responsibility to local businesses. The committee has been asked to delay setting up the new management structure for another 12 months, to give the council time to evaluate its options. Mr Spiller told the committee: "The business has not fulfilled its funding commitment. "The reason it didn't fulfil the commitment is because it has not been able to provide certain information and documentation that is necessary for us to be able to undertake the cash flow analysis that was required. "Consequently, it would be appropriate for us to complete the cash flow analysis over a 12-month period of time." The proposed review comes after the council had previously voted against the agency's renewal by a majority of 14 to 4. Councillor Peter Robinson, cabinet member for infrastructure and economic development, said: "The City Council should not have to fund the City of Sheffield Visit Sheffield. "The council has been funding the Visit Sheffield body from the start. "The organisation is supposed to provide a good service for the city but they have been let down by the local tourism body. "We are not saying the organisation needs to be cancelled, but we want to see some changes." Brian Jolley, the organisation's director, has offered to provide the £1.5m funding commitment for two further years. A decision on whether to bring forward a motion on the funding commitment will be at the council's meeting next week. You'll be the first one sitting." At this point, Birgita started to collect herself. Her terror
