No need to know if there is not loop already solve this? A: Like this? var array2=[]; array2.push(10); array2.push(20); array2.push(30); array2.push(array2.length, array2.length + 1, array2.length + 1) That assumes you really want an array though, in which case array2.push(array2.length, array2.length + 1, array2.length + 1).push(array1[0], array1[1], array1[2]) //Populate final value Fish exports surpass $1.5bn for fifth straight month Total global ocean fish exports for October (not seasonally adjusted) at 5.8 million tonnes (MT) were up from November’s 5.5MT. Well it was a nice try, but a dud and quite insulting to those that play the game and give it a fair go. I’ll tell you now, the statement of “you will feel every possible emotion” is all hype. It is a combination of good sound, graphics, cinematics, and a good atmosphere and story set up, it’s not some new gameplay mechanic, it’s a good bit of effective, atmospheric storytelling. It’s not easy and I’m not impressed but it doesn't look or play like a 'fear' title by any means. I don't feel people that have not played the game should be insulting those who have. Personally, I think the game is quite good and if you don't like it, that's fair enough, but to call it a complete success is ludicrous and insulting. PARANOIHELL For PC

After being ripped from the real world and deposited into the dream of a man with no name, you and the other souls in your mental torture chamber have to try and escape to find answers to your paranormal questions. Answers that will either provide you with what little comfort in your hellish hell hole or drive you to commit suicide. Graphics: ParanoiHELL's graphics are very minimalistic, but even more minimalist than the graphics most games have nowadays. The rooms look rather plain and mundane. Nothing you see looks overly elaborate or realistic, but for it being a mirror of our own world, it's not bad at all. The colors are adequate if not accurate to the real world. The lighting and color schemes are consistent throughout the scenes, which makes the game a visual treat. Sound: The ominous sound effects complement the spooky atmosphere of this game. The sound effects are appropriate for the game, though it wouldn't be detrimental for others to not hear them. The sound effects also add more atmosphere to the game as well as the characters. In case you prefer music, the music that plays during cut-scenes is soothing and adds a really intense vibe to the game that makes it much more fun. Story: A man wakes up one day and thinks to himself, "What a long strange trip it's been" as he looks through his recollection of things that happened to him while in the past. Things such as his brother's death, his father's sickness, and his mother's escape. Regardless of whether or not you choose to believe in supernatural beings and paranormal events, this game will tell you a story of people who are supposed to not exist anymore. Gameplay: This game is not your typical action or horror game in which you hack and slash your way through people. ParanoiHELL is a creepy adventure game where most of the gameplay takes place in a third person perspective. While the game uses a first-person perspective when you approach your enemies, you never get a chance to do anything to them. You'll watch people walk around and occasionally get a chance to see their dreams. All you can do is walk past people as fast as possible. The only other time you can interact with someone is if they have a dream related to yours and you can have a conversation with them, ask them a question, or warn them of some danger. In order to solve your issues of the paranormal, you go back to the room you were kidnapped from and choose your questions from the list. Next,

What's new in PARANOIHELL:

A, France — Only minutes earlier, he was starting a busy day of writing reports. Reports for other senior police officers, just one source of the information he has to include in every alarm call he attends. Sébastien Le Clain, a 33-year old detective sergeant at the Escalles center of France, looked down at the computer screen and sighed. His colleague had just notified him of the gunshot wounds suffered by a 3-year old girl. The father, who was watching a football match earlier that evening, sits at the scene with his head in his hands. Terrified, he blocks the mouth of the body as if to say he does not want to see her death but must. The 30-year old mother does not want to be interviewed either, because she said she has had enough of that. After the father and the mother have been interviewed by paramedics, surrounded by a few curious onlookers, the Escalles police begin documenting what's left. The children's grandfather doesn't want to come to the station either. Only the children's grandmother would sit in the station for long. She used to live in this town, so she is very familiar with what's left of the family in the next room. At about 10:30 pm that evening, a gunman, a 29-year old man, named Ahmed Merabet, entered the Jewish supermarket. He fired eight shots at random into the crowd with his 9mm handgun. Two people died, another eight have severe wounds. The survivors — from more than a dozen people — were taken to a nearby hospital. Two employees of the supermarket sat in their compartment on the fifth floor of the Bataclan, nearby. It was there that the music of a gospel choir reached them. They told the police that they had been asleep until they heard the gunshots. The gunman killed them too. And the motive is still unknown. It's an event that shocked all of us and Paris, but especially the Jews. For them, life in France feels normal. In recent years, France has been the most welcoming country in Europe to immigrants, Jews especially, who made the effort to become Francophones, learning French, despite their culture and religious background. Over 30,000 Jewish residents of France regularly go back to Israel for holidays. The number of Jews living in Paris is estimated at more than 20,000. Of these, about 15,000 are Christian while the others are

Notes: I know, I know, everyone's all "Godspeed You! Black Emperor!" Yeah, so you're probably gonna disagree with me. Why? 'Cause you're still listening to fucking Soundgarden. Anyway, this is one of those mixtapes where I try to combine the ideas of two very disparate genres. I'm interested in the common ground that these two seemingly incompatible genres share, which is a weird sense of
